

Politics Under God

John H. Redekop's biblically focused consideration of church-state relations weighs the challenges of political involvement for Christians. Drawing on decades of writing about public policy issues in Canada and the United States, Redekop affirms politics as an appropriate arena of Christian service and government as an institution established by and accountable to God.

"Politics Under God is a thoughtful review of the Christian's relationship to government that draws conclusions that will surprise readers who expect a conventional Anabaptist perspective. A good addition to the bookshelves of Christians who wrestle with the ethics of the two kingdoms."

—Chuck Colson, Founder and Chairman of Prison Fellowship

"Redekop's analysis is a timely and informative discussion of church-state relations. Those who recognize that both church and state are established and guided by God will find this book to be an important asset in assisting them in harmonizing their relationship with each institution in a principled fashion."

—Vic Toews, Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada

"This book is a must read for those who struggle to reconcile the tension between the demands of faith and government yet desire lives that are relevant and that engage our communities on the issues that really count."

—Ed Fast, Member of Parliament, Ottawa

"John Redekop provides a timely and passionate primer on politics, citizenship, and the relationship between church and state from a Christian perspective . . . with practical and helpful insights into our Christian responsibility to bear a constructive witness to governments."

—Bruce Clemenger, President, Evangelical Fellowship of Canada
